DNR Recreation Planning for Reiter Foothills Forest

The Washington State Department of Natural Resources (DNR) is beginning to plan for future recreation in the Reiter Foothills Forest. DNR is focusing on this area because of the variety of uses that occur in this area, including off road vehicle access.

The Reiter Foothills Forest, located in northwest Washington, is a block of state trust forest land located between Sultan and Index, and sandwiched between Highway 2 and the Mount Baker-Snoqualmie National Forest. Annually thousands of visitors enjoy ORV riding, horseback riding, hiking, and mountain biking.

The Reiter Foothills Forest is part of the legacy of more than five million acres of state-owned forest, aquatic, agricultural and urban lands managed by DNR for long-term benefits to current and future trust beneficiaries and the people of Washington.

The Forest is a “working forest” – a place where people work and play outdoors, as planned harvesting and reforestation produce a stream of revenue to schools and county trusts, and where native plants and animals and their habitats thrive.

The Planning Process

This planning process initiated in January 2008 is intended to guide how DNR manages recreation and public access in Reiter Foothills Forest. This area has a pressing need for well-planned recreation facilities that can be managed and maintained to DNR standards.

A goal of this project is to determine recreation management objectives. Key decisions include what types of recreation will occur in what places, and what facilities are needed where. This project builds on previous assessments, and will result in an agency-approved, prioritized implementation strategy.

Topics to be addressed include: analysis of recreational needs, such as trail and camping needs; how best to provide for different types of recreational activities; and how to ensure environmental resource protection.

Public Involvement Opportunities

During the planning process, there will be many opportunities for citizens to be involved. In the next 12 months, there will be meetings and workshops to discuss, review and gather feedback on how best to manage recreation facilities and trails in this popular area of the forest. A diversity of participation is very important to the planning process. Feedback from recreation visitors, neighbors, members of local government, and the general public will ensure successful implementation of the plan.
