

Have a boat at the end of its useful life?

When your dreamboat becomes a nightmare, a vessel beyond repair, please don't just abandon it.

Boats left behind in the water leak oil and other toxics, polluting marine habitat and contaminating wildlife.

The right and legal way to get rid of an old boat is to haul it to a boat disposal site. Find the one nearest you on the map (see reverse) and get in touch to make arrangements.

You may get paid for recyclable parts of your boat, and you'll save the Washington Department of Natural Resources (DNR) the expense of having to remove an abandoned vessel from the water, which can be 10 times greater than the cost of hauling a boat to a salvage center.

If you can't afford the cost of getting your boat to a disposal site, you might be eligible for the DNR's priority-based Vessel Turn-in Program (VTIP). VTIP helps approved owners dispose of their vessels safely and legally, and may even cover the costs.

(not a 24-hour response number)

Toxics from derelict vessels and other sources build up in organisms that absorb or ingest them. These toxics increase in concentration in the tissues of organisms as they move up the food chain and contribute to the decline of species at the top like salmon and orcas, highly endangered marine mammals that feed primarily on salmon.
